Module EAS-2734: Discourse, Society and Culture (Seminar, 8) Discourse, Society and Culture (Seminar, 8)		8 ECTS/LP
Version 1.0.1 (since WS23/24) Person responsible for module: Prof. Dr. Claudia Claridge Prof. Dr. Anita Fetzner
Contents: Analysis and discussion of the rule-based variation of the English language and its use in social varieties, taking account of all relevant linguistic levels (including phonetics / phonology, syntax, morphosyntax, morphology, lexicology, pragmatics and discourse) and sociolinguistic levels (including forms of address, politeness and gender). Discussion of the possible relationships between language, discourse and social reality.
Learning Outcomes / Competences: Students acquire in-depth knowledge of linguistic tools and their application to linguistic, sociolinguistic and ethnographic issues. They understand the relationships and competitions between linguistic realisations such as standard vs. non-standard, sociolects and ethnolects, monolingual vs. multilingual, creolisation as well as linguistic variables. Students extend their competences in analysing and describing the relationship between culture, social contexts, identity, and language use. They are able to apply concepts from traditional and interactional sociolinguistics, critical discourse analysis, and stylistics to recognise regularities and modes of action. They can critically reflect on (qualitative and quantitative) methods of analysis. They improve their strategies for acquiring information from scientific research literature and learn to plan and implement independent research projects regarding aims, data and presentation as well as to critically evaluate others' projects. Students develop intercultural and transcultural skills. Students' skills regarding team work, time management, and academic communication are further improved.

Module EAS-3060: Didactics: Introduction Didactics: Introduction (6 LP)		6 ECTS/LP
Version 2.0.0 (since SoSe20) Person responsible for module: Prof. Dr. Engelbert Thaler
Contents: Introduction to basic theories, key concepts, approaches, and foreign language teaching methodology; introduction to key aspects in TEFL and foreign language research; introduction to learning objectives, key issues of second language acquisition, foreign language learning and teaching against the backdrop of profession-oriented contexts and teaching practices.
Learning Outcomes / Competences: module part I: Lecture Students acquire a basic knowledge of the teaching and learning of English as a foreign language. They are able to understand and theoretically explain domain-specific teaching and learning processes. In doing so, they are able to differentiate between foreign language skills and competences, methodological and didactic approaches to English language teaching and their implementation in classroom contexts. Students understand teaching/learning processes as a complex interaction of subject-specific, individual, institutional factors and educational policy. module part 2: Supplementary Course In this supplementary course students acquire basic knowledge and skills in dealing with academic key concepts and techniques from a TEFL perspective, which they will later on need, apply and further deepen in the context of their study program. For example, students will acquire knowledge of how to prepare, conduct and evaluate classroom observations in a criterion-guided manner. They will explore the aspects that need to be taken into account when developing their own teaching and learning materials and understand which didactic principles of TEFL are used to design modern textbooks. Another focus is the acquisition of basic knowledge and skills with regard to the writing of term papers in TEFL.

Module DAF-6101: Master Module: Applied Linguistics German as a Foreign Language MM Angewandte Sprachwissenschaft Deutsch als Fremdsprache		12 ECTS/LP
Version 1.1.0 (since WS15/16)
Person responsible for module: Prof. Dr. Kristina Peuschel
Contents: In-depth reflection on content from the areas of investigation and application of Intercultural Communication/ Intercultural Learning, Migration and Identity Research or Second Language Acquisition and Multilingualism Research or Linguistics.
Learning Outcomes / Competences: Subject-specific The students deepen their knowledge in the interdisciplinary fields of investigation and application of intercultural communication/intercultural learning, migration research, identity research and/or multilingualism research or language acquisition research. They are able to critically reflect on and apply theoretical approaches and models in the treatment of interculturality. They also deal intensively with questions relevant to the teaching of intercultural aspects and competencies in second and foreign language teaching. Methodological The students can independently research and develop comprehensive research literature on a special topic. They present their work results in a differentiated and reflective manner in oral and written form. They deepen their knowledge of methods for researching language and communication phenomena and sharpen their analytical understanding in working with concrete data material. Social/personal In academic discourse, students justify and modify their own positions. They further develop factual and situationally appropriate communication behavior. They are able to work on research questions independently and in cooperation with other students and to structure their self-study appropriately over a longer period of time. They also increase their intercultural sensitivity and tolerance of ambiguity in professional debate.

Version 1.3.0 (since WS15/16) Person responsible for module: Prof. Dr. Kristina Peuschel
Contents: In-depth reflection on methodological and didactic issues of second and foreign language teaching in the area of German as a foreign language.
Learning Outcomes / Competences: Subject-specific The students have in-depth methodological-didactic theories and concepts on a subject-didactic focus (grammar teaching, pronunciation training, reading comprehension, etc.) and/or on topics of classroom interaction (e.g. correction, feedback, scaffolding). They know the specific demands that these concepts place on teachers and learners. They are able to critically reflect on methodological concepts with regard to foreign and second language didactics and to develop them with regard to concrete teaching settings. Methodical The students can independently research and deduce comprehensive research literature on a special topic. They present their work results in a differentiated and reflected manner in oral and written form. In guided and self-acting tests, the students deepen their abilities and skills with regard to concrete teaching and learning procedures. In the case of deepening a subject-didactic focus, the students are able to develop didactically sound teaching sequences and create curricular planning drafts. Social/personal In academic discourse, students justify and modify their own positions. They further develop factual and situation-appropriate communication behavior. They are able to work on research questions independently and in cooperation with other students and to structure their self-study appropriately over a longer period of time. Version 1.1.0 (since WS15/16) Person responsible for module: Prof. Dr. Alfred Wildfeuer
Contents: In-depth reflection on linguistic and linguistic-systematic sub-areas with application to the German language.
Learning Outcomes / Competences: Subject-specific The students have in-depth skills and abilities in core areas of German linguistics. They deal with language-related aspects in a linguistically well-founded manner from a foreign and second language didactic perspective. They are also able to critically reflect on and further develop theoretical approaches and models from the field of language acquisition and multilingualism research on the basis of their linguistic competencies. Methodological The students can independently research and develop comprehensive research literature on a special topic. They present their work results in a differentiated and reflective manner in oral and written form. They are able to present diverse - and if necessary also controversial - linguistic positions and weigh them up against each other. They also demonstrate their linguistic abilities and skills in working with concrete data material. In doing so, they secure and sharpen their methodological and analytical understanding in a subject-related manner. Social/personal In academic discourse, students justify and modify their own positions. They further develop factual and situational communication behavior. They are able to work on research questions independently and structure their self-study appropriately over a longer period of time. Module EAS-2935: Form and Meaning (Seminar 8 LP) Form and Meaning (Hauptseminar 8 LP)		8 ECTS/LP
Version 1.0.1 (since WS23/24) Person responsible for module: Prof. Dr. Anita Fetzer Prof. Dr. Claudia Claridge
Contents: Analysis of the relationship between formal realisations and (different) meanings on the levels of word, construction, sentence and text. Analysis of the contributions of lexical (denotative, connotative, cognitive), functional-grammatical, propositional, and context-dependent and context-independent meanings, including the consideration of compositionality. Analysis of 'competing' variants, e.g. -s vs. of-genitive, as well as the relationship between variation and language change. Analysis of the information structure of texts and the forms used, e.g. passive, cleft sentences.
Learning Outcomes / Competences: Students acquire in-depth knowledge of important semantic and discourse(-analytic) models, of the possibilities of formal realisations and their functional differences in context, of relevant models for constructing meaning, and of pragmatic-based models of language change. Students acquire the ability to analyse semantic-formal relationships, to apply models and theories to data and to critically discuss the analysis results. They advance their competence in the use and production of scientific discourse. Students improve their abilities for oral academic discourse using the appropriate register and goal-oriented argumentation strategies. Students acquire context-dependent intercultural competence.

Version 1.0.1 (since WS23/24) Person responsible for module: Prof. Dr. Anita Fetzer Prof. Dr. Claudia Claridge
Contents: Analysis of the structural characteristics of oral and written forms of expression as well as their differences in selected (digital) media . Analysis of the regularity of oral forms of interaction (inter alia turn-taking system). Differentiation of texts according to stylistic and functional aspects (e.g. register, genre) as well as critical reflection of relevant concepts. Investigations of selected discourse contexts, e.g. media, politics, and their special contextual characteristics as well as their communicative goals and forms of interaction, including historical change at register and genre level. Presentation of cognitive and psycholinguistic models and approaches to speech and text comprehension.
Learning Outcomes / Competences: Students acquire in-depth knowledge of text and discourse theories (including text linguistics, (critical) discourse analysis, discourse grammar) and their constitutive components (including coherence, cohesion, discourse relations) and of form- and function-based discourse analysis, as well as their application in different contexts. They acquire in-depth knowledge of linguistic structures and their meanings in local and global contexts. Students improve their ability to (critically) analyse discourse models as well as local and global structures and sequences. They are familiar with models for validating discourse theories (e.g. questionnaires, interviews, experiments, discourse completion tasks). Students gain in-depth knowledge of the strategies of scientific/academic discourse with regard to appropriate use and production, and are able to engage constructively with criticism.

Version 1.0.0 (since WS15/16) Person responsible for module: Prof. Petra Kirchhoff
Contents: Introduction to basic theories, key concepts, approaches, and foreign language teaching methodology; introduction to key aspects in TEFL and foreign language research; introduction to learning objectives, key issues of second language acquisition, foreign language learning and teaching against the backdrop of profession-oriented contexts and teaching practices.
Learning Outcomes / Competences: module part I: Lecture Students acquire a basic knowledge of the teaching and learning of English as a foreign language. They are able to understand and theoretically explain domain-specific teaching and learning processes. In doing so, they are able to differentiate between foreign language skills and competences, methodological and didactic approaches to English language teaching and their implementation in classroom contexts. Students understand teaching/learning processes as a complex interaction of subject-specific, individual, institutional factors and educational policy. module part 2: Supplementary Course In this supplementary course students acquire basic knowledge and skills in dealing with academic key concepts and techniques from a TEFL perspective, which they will later on need, apply and further deepen in the context of their study program. For example, students will acquire knowledge of how to prepare, conduct and evaluate classroom observations in a criterion-guided manner. They will explore the aspects that need to be taken into account when developing their own teaching and learning materials and understand which didactic principles of TEFL are used to design modern textbooks. Another focus is the acquisition of basic knowledge and skills with regard to the writing of term papers in TEFL.

Literature: Thaler, Engelbert. Englisch unterrichten . Berlin: Cornelsen, 2014. (Die in der Vorlesung behandelten Kapitel sollten wöchentlich vorbereitend gelesen werden.)
Assigned Courses: Introduction to the Teaching of English (lecture) **
Examination Didactics: Introduction (V+Ü, 5 LP) module exam, written final exam / length of examination: 90 minutes, graded Test Frequency: when a course is offered
Parts of the Module
Part of the Module: Begleitübung zur Vorlesung "Introduction to the Teaching of English" Mode of Instruction: exercise course Language: English / German Contact Hours: 2
Learning Outcome: In this supplementary course students acquire basic knowledge and skills in dealing with academic key concepts and techniques from a TEFL perspective, which they will later on need, apply and further deepen in the context of their study program. For example, students will acquire knowledge of how to prepare, conduct and evaluate classroom observations in a criterion-guided manner. They will explore the aspects that need to be taken into account when developing their own teaching and learning materials and understand which didactic principles of TEFL are used to design modern textbooks. Another focus is the acquisition of basic knowledge and skills with regard to the writing of term papers in TEFL.
Contents: This supplementary course to the main lecture "Introduction to the Teaching of English" aims to outline important skills and key concepts in English language teaching. It will particularly cover sessions about academic writing skills in which you will gain a preliminary insight into writing term papers and preparing handouts. These sessions will be embedded into meaningful contexts by analyzing some practical examples, e.g. selected articles about contemporary issues in foreign language teaching, excerpts from formerly submitted term papers. Furthermore, students will have ample opportunities to discuss some key concepts, such as the impact of globalization on modern language teaching, guidelines for selecting and designing effective language teaching materials. Finally, your questions about our chair (Teaching English as a Foreign Language), exams (final exam, state examination) and course selection will be answered. Depending on the requirements of your study program, this supplementary course (Begleitübung) is an obligatory one and needs to be taken in the same semester with the introductory lecture (Einführungsvorlesung). The final exam will cover both the introductory lecture and the supplementary course.

Version 1.0.0 (since WS15/16) Person responsible for module: Dr. Maximilian Gröne
Contents: Knowledge of and reflection on the European Enlightenment as a culture of communication (culture understood as the totality of a society's symbolic forms and media of communication. Among other things, the module aims at reflecting on cultural transfer processes between France and Germany as well as Europe as a whole, taking into account current communication phenomena and intercultural perception processes such as forms of interaction, discourse traditions and their historical roots (in the French or European Enlightenment). In doing so, the focus is on the specifics of the cultural area, especially France in the overall European context and in relation to the Francophone cultural area.
Learning Outcomes / Competences: Students have in-depth knowledge of French Enlightenment culture and are able to analyze and reflect on the possible effects of Enlightenment cultures of thought and communication on modernity and into the present. In addition, students are able to identify French specifics in relation to the pan-European cultural transfer processes of the European Enlightenment. They develop a deeper understanding of the cultural area of France, from which in turn their own culture is also derived and which enables a differentiated historicizing and intercultural view of pan-European developments. They are able to understand the specific relationship of France to different francophone cultural areas (Québec, Maghreb, etc.).
